Complete and Fabulous!By Anastacia BriceI originally received a copy because a profession I founded is profiled, and I wanted to read what Sandra Gurvis had written.What I found, on top of fabulous information about Virtual Assistance, was a book that's well-written, and that covers a multitude of careers for people who are ready to do work that really allows them to shine and be authentic.If you're looking for what's next for you, consider getting a copy of this book -- you won't be sorry!

Occupations that require individualism, creativity, and even eccentricity are much more common than most people realize. For people who have never fit the corporate mold and want to go their own route, Careers for Nonconformists is an essential handbook. Sandra Gurvis reviews the nuts and bolts of being one's own boss. She showcases 75 jobs and touches on dozens more within 15 areas of interest, from animals and the outdoors to entertainment and arts and crafts. She covers what it takes to break into a field, what to expect, and what people will need to do to thrive. The book includes complete reference information on professional associations, Web sites, trade magazines, and other useful resources, as well as 30 profiles of real people who have succeeded in unusual endeavors.

As a full-time author of 45 published books, I am already engaged in a career of a nonconformist. Where was Sandra Gurvis' book when I first started writing and really needed it? This book would have been a godsend. I recommend it to all nonconformists in search of fulfilling their dreams. -- Robert L. Shook, best-selling business writerDon't quit your day job without reading this book first. It's the most accurate, most complete and most amusing rendition of the freelance condition I've read in nearly two decades of working for myself. -- Fred Gebhart, freelance photojournalistAbout the AuthorSandra Gurvis is a freelance writer whose articles have appeared in People, Entertainment Weekly, Country Living, and other publications. Her five books include The Off-the-Beaten-Path Job Book and 30 Great Cities to Start Out In. She lives in Columbus, OH.
