Timothy Butler, James, Ph.D. Waldroop : Discovering Your Career in Business before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Discovering Your Career in Business:

I owe this book (and Timothy Waldroop) my career, and probably a huge chunk of being happy in general. I hired Dr Waldroop as my career counselor well over a decade ago (I read the book and then tracked him down). Because of him I made a huge career change and am SO incredibly happy and grateful I did. I used to HATE my job (lawyer) and now I love my job (professor in totally different field). Really changed my life. This book is well researched (their career counseling is based on rigorous research into matching career interests to particular fields/jobs, and how that match corresponds to career success and satisfaction), but also written so that it speaks to the regular person and is useful to the regular person. It's been out of print for a while, but it's still relevant and really helpful - I buy it for my students and clients on a regular basis. Their online site now has their career tests (interests, values, etc) but this is a great place to start. 3 of 3 people found the following review helpful. Where is the test?? By Master James I purchased the kindle edition. It keeps referring to your BCII score, but I have no way of taking it. Why would they sell a kindle edition and not provide a way to take the test? This is very frustrating.. 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. Good book - badly marketed By Nikotbg The book seemed to be very promising until I discovered that I don't have the accompanying disk ( I bought it in Kindle version) . I'm in a dead end street: the only option seems to be the online Career Leader Test which costs $95. Such a nonsense!!!!

Created by the Directors of MBA Career Development Programs at the Harvard Business School, Discovering Your Career in Business and the Business Career Interest Inventory (BCII) are based on over ten years of research with more than 650 business professionals. The result is a sophisticated, state-of-the-art career counseling tool that provides a highly nuanced self-assessment profile and direction to specific business work environments and activities that will lead to career satisfaction and success. The BCII, provided here on disk, contains its own scoring system and can be run on the floppy drive of any Windows PC.

From Booklist Meet Caroline Greeley, a very attractive movie marketer who, despite the industry's glamour, was very uncomfortable in her job. This individual (and others) from the business career front has psychologists Butler and Waldrop to thank, since the authors developed a remarkable series of guides to help the lost and confused find their way in the workday world. Expect more specific advice than what is proffered in What Color Is Your Parachute? or by highly paid (and unregulated) career counselors. The authors' unique eight-profile "Business Career Interest Inventory" (included in disk format) and active imagination exercises constitute a breakthrough in the job-counseling field. Explanations and case histories abound, as do realistic appraisals of how Americans are seduced by a career's different "siren songs" --i.e., money and status, extreme expectations, etc. This book travels beyond the all-too-common complaint--Why do bad jobs happen to good people?--in recognizing that work satisfaction would otherwise occur only by serendipity. Barbara Jacobs Any pursuing a business career would do well to examine this survey of career options, interests, and avenues to success. From analyzing one's own business profile to understanding the basics of business work, this reveals important business trends and keys to fitting individuals within business structures which work for them. -- Midwest Book About the Author Timothy Butler and James Waldrop in addition to their work at the Harvard Business School, are principals in Waldrop Butler Associates of Brookline, Massachusetts, a firm which specializes in career assessment and counseling, and in executive coaching.
